time ordering several large bells to be suspended at it when Melech Mahommmed saw himself thus equipped and recollected this indiscretion he could not help admitting.

Again my said deserts true My Punishment is just is true Since every poor excuse is vain You justly give you path he vain Cheti afox returned sleep and left him leisure for reflection Mercy on me thought he what a dreadful change a glance of the eye has produced He was already but too well acquainted with the tender Mercy of his Mistress and he could not now help regretting that a trifling childish desire should lead person into such terrible Misfortunes,

Your heart is Marble soul of mine Ner can to Mercys voice incline In vain my wistful eyes entreat Compassion that they neer shole meet The more his reflection came to his aid the greater was his distress and the more Remedies did his case appear He not only foresaw that the Shah as well as his uncle would inevitably be spectators of his disgrace but he recollected with no very pleasu-table emotions that not a single particle of
