

Shah struck up the double drums the trumpets the serpents and the cornets and the barbuts and all the other kinds of Musucal instruments The sound of Ansar Shaks drum was heard as far as five farsangs all the world were enraptured at the noise and immediately prepared to celebrate the Marriage I short an assembly was soon collected like that of the blest in Paradise illuminating the world and thus they spent seven days in festive joys on the eighth day which was that of the ceremony he ordered all the city to be adorned with looking glasses and to be illuminated with lustris and torches in the most splended style He himself went in procession with all his hosts of Houris and Peris with royal splendor and he ordered his now Juan Bukht to proceed before him to the splendid palace where the bride resided There they prepared a throne for the Shah so splended that it dazzled the eyes of all the world ansar Shah seated himself on the throne and Ghiti Afroz adorned herself in the most elegant royal robes for thought she Melech Mahommed will see me while on every side the Perizadis in squadrons and in rows ranged
